June 18, 2020

The Town of Ridgeland, South Carolina invites proposals from licensed professional archaeologists to conduct “root ball” archaeology on trees to be removed from the Honey Hill Battlefield due to a wind throw event. – Hurricane Irma. This project is funded by a grant from the U.S. Department of the Interior, National Park Service, and administered by the S.C. Department of Archives and History.

All proposals must be received no later than 2:00 p.m. EST on July 24, 2020.

I. INTRODUCTION

The purpose of the project is to conduct metal detection archaeology on the root balls of 23 downed trees and the cavity resulting from the root ball removal from the Honey Hill Battlefield Site. It is the intent of the Town of Ridgeland to carefully preserve this significant historic site and establish a public interpretive and recreational park.

During the American Civil War, from late November 1864 to February 1865, Union and Confederate armies clashed around what is today the Town of Ridgeland, South Carolina. On November 28, a Union expeditionary force, commanded by Major General John P. Hatch, steamed up the Broad River in transports to cut the Charleston and Savannah Railroad near Pocotaligo, South Carolina in support of the anticipated arrival of the army led by Major General William T. Sherman at Savannah.

Hatch disembarked at Boyd’s Landing and marched inland with his force of five thousand men. At Honey Hill, the Union troops encountered a Confederate force of regulars and militia, commanded by Colonel Charles J. Colcock. Determined attacks by the 2nd Brigade, which included the 54th Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, the 55th Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and the 102nd U.S. Colored Troops commanded by Colonel Alfred S. Hartwell, failed to capture the Confederate position or reach the railroad to sever the line. After dark, Hatch withdrew his troops to the transports at Boyd’s Neck. Union troops recorded 89 men killed, 629 wounded, and 28 missing. Confederate casualties were estimated at 50 men killed or wounded.

II. Scope of Work

The scope of work for this project should include the following components:

A - Processes:

1. The archaeologist will be responsible for examining the root balls from the trees to be removed from the battlefield to recover any artifacts. The archaeologist will also metal detect any surface exposed by the removal of a tree.
2. The South Carolina Battleground Preservation Trust (SCBPT) holds the conservation easement on the property and oversees the battlefield development on the Town's behalf. On this project, the SCBPT shall serve as the project manager and must be present during the tree removal to insure the protection of the historic earthworks on the battlefield.
3. The 23 trees of various sizes to be removed have been identified in a survey.
4. The bid packet includes a map noting the location of the trees and a spreadsheet which indicates the GPS coordinates of each downed tree.
5. The Professional Archaeologist will metal detect each root ball to be removed as well as any cavity resulting from the removal of the root ball.
6. Any cavity in the ground surface or the earthworks created by the removal of the root ball shall be backfilled by white sand to readily identify the replacement soil from the native material.
7. Any historic artifacts that are uncovered during the tree removal process must be inventoried and conserved prior to the artifact being delivered to the Town of Ridgeland.
8. Each root ball/cavity should be photographed prior to and after metal detecting.
9. A tarp should be placed within the base of the root ball prior to metal detecting in order to catch and distinguish any soil that falls during excavation.
10. It should be specified that metal detecting of the cavity shall not exceed disturbed soils.
11. A report should be completed following the investigations in order to document the findings of the metal detecting conducted at each tree location, the artifacts collected from each root ball and the inventory of the artifacts. This will help inform any future archaeological work and aid our understanding of the battlefield.
